NUMBER 33.

Eugene Lax's Ghost.

A COMPLETE STORY, BY "WANDERING JIM."

“CAN it be possible that I am mistaken? No; it is the form of a handsome, gallant young man, restlessly pacing up and down the winding walks leading to an elegant mansion. Now and then he pauses to listen, and at last coming to a full halt near a rose-myrtle, imagines he hears a faint sound of footsteps. His over-taxed patience was soon rewarded by the appearance of a female figure.

“Eugene,” whispered a soft voice “Eugene, is it you?”

“It seems almost an eternity I have waited, Elsie,” he said.

“I could not come sooner,” she replied. “He would have me sing him song after song, and would not listen to a refusal. He is a cruel tyrant! Oh! I pity the woman who becomes his wife.”

“Have you told your father that you would not marry this man, Elsie? If not, do so at the earliest moment possible, for I have no likings for secrets, and I must win you openly. Your father is a man of much ability and good sense, and would not give his daughter's hand in marriage to one man when her heart belonged to another. Therefore, tell him the truth, Elsie, or else bid me tell him; I can endure these secret meetings no longer.”

“You do not know my father, Eugene, as I do. He betrothed me to Felix Laverne when I was a mere child and Felix only a boy of twelve; he considers that as binding. But if Felix were a different man all might be well—I would need but to ask his aid to break the foolish compact. Ah! but he is so different from all other men. Though I have been as disagreeable as I dared, yet he has chosen to be in love with me, and is determined. Between themselves they have this night set the wedding-day. I am ordered to be ready one month from to-night, Eugene.”

“And still you said nothing?” asked the young man.

Elsie suddenly turned, cast herself into his arms, and, hiding her face upon his bosom, sobbed out: “I was afraid, Eugene. I can not save myself, but I leave it all with you.”

“Then I will go to your father in the morning,” said the young man with renewed hope. “I was only waiting for you to give your consent. Have no fear, my dear; all will be well.”

His arms tightened around her fair form while he imprinted kisses upon her lovely face.

“You shall be mine,” he said, “and I will love thee more and more. Do not be afraid.”

But it is growing late and she must return to the house. The last embrace is taken, and Eugene pausing by the rose-myrtle, sees her vanish in the surrounding darkness.

“On the morrow, thank God, I shall be free of this secret work,” he said. If Captain Warren refuses me his daughter's hand, when I claim it by right of love—

The sound of footsteps caused the young man to stop, and, replacing his hat, which he held in his hand, on his golden curls, he turned and walked toward the outer gate. As he was in the act of leaving the gate, which he had just closed behind him, a dark form stood in his pathway.

“What might be your name?” inquired the new comer.

“My name, sir, is one well-known in this vicinity, and is Eugene Lax. I was born here. You, it seems, have lately come here; and what might be your name?”

“It might be ‘the devil,’ but it is not. I am known where I came from—Louisiana—as well as here, as Felix Laverne, and my business here is of importance. I am engaged to Miss Elsie Warren, by consent of her father. And more than that, sir; for some time I have noticed that something was wrong, and to-night I followed her; I saw her meet you, speak a few words and then fall sobbing into your arms. You have loved, and you can imagine my emotions. There is but one way to settle this affair.”

“I am ready to settle at any time, sir,” replied Eugene; “but let me tell you now that Miss Warren is my promised wife; the affair with you has not her consent at all, but is of her father's making. Tomorrow I shall go to him and claim her. She loves me and will marry me. She may have been wrong in not being candid with you—and I have implored her to do so—but surely you will resign all claims to her when you know that she does not love you and asks you to free her?”

“I refuse to look upon this matter in such a light, sir. I refuse to consider any part but yours. I saw you fold her to your bosom—you must fight me.”

“Name you man! mine shall meet him,” said Eugene.

“No seconds are needed!” hissed Laverne through his clinched teeth. “The moon is just rising, and will give us all the light we need. Are you prepared?”

“I am,” replied Eugene, in a strange and unnatural tone.

“I will stand here; you may choose your stand. The village clock will strike twelve in a moment. At its last stroke we both fire together. Does that suit you?”

“It will be assassination,” said Eugene, “and it does not please me.”

“Then I will shoot you down in your tracks, as I would a dog,” said Laverne, “and I will say that you insulted my betrothed wife.”

“Then if I kill you, your blood be upon your own head,” replied Eugene, as he took his position, twenty paces away.

Laverne laughed a scornful laugh as Lax moved away.

“There is still time for you to set another hour,” said Eugene, quietly.

“And time for you to sneak away,” replied Laverne. “But I shall not give you the opportunity.”

The clock began to strike. In silence they counted the strokes that came from the old belfry. At the last stroke both fired, and Eugene Lax fell forward on his face. Laverne rushed to him. He was senseless, and the blood was gushing from a wound in his side. Eugene Lax's snowy linen was already stained crimson, but Laverne had no pity.

With an oath he lifted the body of the youth in his arms and carried it beyond the huts of the field hands and laid it down behind a small, moss-covered bank near the running stream.

A few moments later, had he watched, he could have seen a pair of glaring eyes protruding above the low hedge, only a few yards away. Yes, “Old Aunt Silvey” was a witness to the whole affair. But what could she do? Well, wait and see.

“There is something very strange about the disappearance of Eugene Lax,” many were saying the following day. And a few days later anxious search was made, but no clue could be obtained. Two weeks passed—a third, and yet no one could solve the mystery concerning the disappearance of the young man, and those who loved him were given up to despair.

Elsie, pale as marble, roamed about her father's house like a ghost, and offered no opposition to the arrangements being made for the approaching marriage to Felix Laverne.

A few days later, it was the evening before the marriage on the next day, Elsie was all smiles. She had made no effort to break the engagement. And while sitting with Felix she proposed taking a stroll down the walks of the garden. The night was a lovely one, and Felix felt duty bound to offer her his arm, while “Old Aunt Silvey” followed close behind.

They had reached the rose-myrtle bush where Laverne stood when he fired the fatal shot. Here they paused; why, they knew not. And for the first time in his life Felix Laverne felt a thrill of superstitious terror run through his veins.

He would gladly have fled the would-be haunted spot, but Elsie stood calm, and, breaking into a merry laugh, said:

“Why, Felix! you look as if you had seen a ghost. What is the matter?”

“My coming happiness has furnished many thoughts,” replied Laverne.

“But you were gazing towards the woods, as though you saw some one,” said Elsie.

“I certainly see some one coming this way,” he replied, as he gazed with startled eyes towards the stream.

“Do you see that man?” he said pointing in the direction of the little mossy bank.

“I see no one at all,” said Elsie.

“There, right before you,” said Laverne, shrinking back.

“Ain't no man here, sah,” said Aunt Silvey. “You're dreamin’!”

“My God!” gasped Laverne; for he plainly saw before him the figure of Eugene Lax—thin, pale, and his golden curls falling over his shoulders, with his hand on his side as though pointing to the wound he had received. “You see him now!” gasped the wretched Laverne.

“No; I see nothing,” replied Elsie.

The figure stood motionless in the moonlight.

“Murderer!” Laverne heard it murmur, softly.

“It was a duel! We fought fairly!” shrieked Laverne. “I did not murder you!”

The figure retreated slowly toward the wood, then turned, and in an instant was again within a few feet of Laverne. But it did not speak to him. In silence it approached Elsie, and taking her hand, waved to Laverne, as though desiring his withdrawal from the spot.

Seeing the ghost lead away his dear Elsie and vanish into the wood, Laverne needed no further warning. In an instant he was gone, and since that hour has not been seen near the little village of Cloverdale.

However, there was a wedding the next day at the Warren mansion. But the bridegroom was Eugene Lax—not Felix Laverne.

Old Aunt Silvey, who witnessed the removal of the body by Laverne, after the shooting, found Lax not dead, but unconscious, and carried him to a hut near by and nursed him back to life. And the little scene which has just been played was concocted by the lovers to rid themselves of Felix Laverne.

Having heard the truth, Captain Warren aided in the plot, and now “all is as merry, etc.”

The following item, clipped from the Ft. Madison (Iowa) Democrat, contains information well worth remembering: “Mr. John Roth, of this city, who met with an accident a few days ago, spraining and bruising his leg and arm quite severely, was cured by one 50 cent bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm.” This remedy is without an equal for sprains and bruises and should have a place in every household. For sale by R. H. Starks.

A new Missouri law provides that if any telegraph company fail to send a message delivered to it shall pay a penalty of $200, one half of which shall be paid the sender and one-half into the school fund.

Hon. W. V. Lucas, Ex-State Auditor of Iowa, says: “I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in my family and have no hesitation in saying it is an excellent remedy. I believe all that is claimed for it. Persons afflicted by a cough or cold will find it a friend.” There is no danger from whooping cough when this remedy is freely given. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by R. H. Starks.

From the Editor.

We left home Sunday night at 8 o'clock, May 28, and soon fell in with Logan Curd, the astute and primary editor of the Murray Ledger. At Paducah we next met and came with Henry Thompson and wife of the News, N. J. Dillard of the Standard and Ed Beaumont of Mayfield. At 2 o'clock at night we took passage on the “cannon ball” for Louisville. After a good sound sleep of six hours we awoke in time to see the train cross over Salt river, 20 miles west of Louisville. About 8 o'clock we pulled into the union depot, and all the editors from this end of the state scattered about to the various hotels in the city, but we made our headquarters at the Willard. As usual at about 11 o'clock we became very sick and rolled and tumbled in agony until 2 p. m., when we arose feeling some better, and went to the meeting of the Kentucky Press association at the Commercial club rooms, in the 10th story of the Commercial building. There we met the men from all parts of the state who mould and control public sentiment. There were nearly 200 newspaper men and women dressed in their best clothes, talking, laughing and drinking (lemonade) in a way that would lead a man to conclude that an editor never had a care on his often be-nighted mind.

At 3 o'clock the meeting was called to order by its president, Mr. Meacham, after which an old Kentucky welcome was extended to the boys by the big, clever Mayor Tyler of Louisville in a good old time way. He was responded to by the president. Dr. Palmer made an excellent talk and asked all of the editors to make themselves at home. Between 5 and 6 p. m. the entire gang was at the Courier-Journal building eating and drinking and talking and laughing and taking in the sights of one of the biggest newspaper offices in the south. Mr. Watterston, Mr. Haldeman and all of the members of the Louisville press were on hand to do all they could to make the country editor feel at home. Many of the editors for the first time witnessed the wonderful working of the 60 Linotype machines to be found in that office.

PHOENIX HILL PARK.

Free transportation was given to 200 of the press to this beautiful and favorite place of resort, and at night in company with Gov. Brown and many other dignitaries of the state, the association remained there until 11 o'clock, eating and drinking everything good until many able and witty toasts were drunk by men from all over the state. The supper was superb and all that the heart of a hungry man could wish. This ended the first day's outing, and Tuesday morning at 8 o'clock we left for Chicago in a special over the big Pennsylvania line, of which I will write in my next.

First Meeting of the Kentucky Legislature.

On Monday, the 4th of June, 1892 commenced the first session of the Kentucky Legislature, and the organization of the State government. On that day Governor Shelby arrived from Danville, where all the conventions had been held and as he came on horse back down the hill which overlooked the little Capital, the citizens made the valley of the Elkhorn respond with the cracking of their flint-lock rifles, and with the roar of an old 6 pounder which the explosive and emphatic Mad Anthony Wayne requested the use of a short time after. The Governor provided with leggins, saddle-bags, and holsters, was halted with his escort at the intersection of the two principal streets of the village, where he was received with military honors, by the largest and most picturesque procession that the Western country had ever seen. There, with all the formality and punctiousness that Sir Charles Grandison himself could have desired, he was presented with a written address of welcome in behalf of Lexington by Mr. John Bradford or “Old Wisdom,” as he was admirably called the chairman of the town board of trustees, the editor of the only newspaper in the Commonwealth, and a gentleman of substantial scientific attainments. The oath of office was administered to the Governor who, after more salutes had been indulged in, took his place in the procession, which immediately began to move, and to the sound of drum and fife and ten village bells he was escorted through the main street, past the printing office, the site of the old block house, the prosperous looking stores, and the liberty pole, the pillory, and the stocks, the court house yard, where the settlers hitched their horses, and on to the Sheaf of Wheat inn, where he “lighted from his tired nag and lodged. The “Light Infantry” and the “Troop of Horse” then paraded the unpaved public square, where the inaugural ceremonies were concluded by the firing of fifteen rounds—one for each of the states then in the Union and a general discharge of rifles in honor of new Governor.

The General Assembly met in the State House, a gloomy but substantial two story log building of the regular old pioneer type, above whose gabled roof on Main street floated the American flag. It met however mainly to elect officers, after which it adjourned, and the rest of the day was spent in rejoicings, in the announcement of appointments by the Governor, and in the interchange of courtesies between the citizens and their guests. On the 6th June, after the Legislature had been fully organized, the members of the Senate Chamber of the State House formally received the Governor's message, which was delivered in person, after the elaborate Federal style of the day, which was followed in Kentucky up to the time of Gov. Scott, when it was changed to the present simple one in accordance with a precedent established by President Jefferson. Exactly at noon the Governor entered the plain and unpretentious room attended by Secretary of State and was immediately conducted to a position on the right of the Speaker of the Senate, when after respectfully addressing first the Senate and the House, he proceeded to read the communication he had prepared. At the close of the address, he delivered to each Speaker a copy of the manuscript and retired as solemnly and formally as he had entered. The two houses then separated, and after gravely voting an address in reply to that of his Excellency, adjourned. It was a curious sight, that first session of the Kentucky Legislature, where an imitation of a kingly custom of Great Britain appeared in such striking contrast to the natural and unaffected ways of early Western life; the pomp of the House of Lords in a log cabin; the royal ermine and the Republican coin skin.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We are authorized to announce
E. BARRY
of Marshall county, a candidate to represent Marshall and Lyon counties in the next General Assembly of Kentucky subject to the action of the democratic party.

WED. EVENING, JUNE 7.

THE K. P. A.

The members of this association for one time can not complain at the railroad companies or the managers of the World's fair. The railroads in Kentucky, of course, gave the "moulders of public opinion" free transportation to and from Louisville, all of which have our most grateful thanks. The Pennsylvania line will ever have the hearty co-operation of the Ky press for the manifold courtesies and kindnesses shown it while on the recent visit to Chicago. When ever a person goes from here to Chicago to visit the Columbian exposition don't fail to go via this excellent road and return by the "Monon." One gave us free transportation out and the other in, and it is the duty of all people to praise the bridge that carries them over safe. These roads did that for the Kentucky Press association. The commissioners of the World's fair did all in their power to make each and everyone of the association happy, and in which they made no failure. This was indeed one of the most successful and enjoyable meetings the press has ever had the pleasure of enjoying. If there was a member of the association that did not feel well paid for his visit we failed to find him. There are a few members of the Association that can't be beaten for hard down genuine cleverness, and we right here take the liberty to name them.

A. Y. Ford, of the Kentucky column of the Courier-Journal; Robert Brown, the big managing editor of the Louisville Times; I. B. Nall, of the Farmers' Home Journal; Robert Morningstar, of the Democrat, and others we can't now name. We never saw an editor drunk, mad or cross, but all were gentlemen of a high order (the editor of the Tribune excepted of course) Every one took a lively interest in the dedication of the Kentucky State building on June 1. The dedication was attended by a large number of people from the state. The speeches of Governor Brown and W. O. Bradley were of the best and received much favorable comment by the Chicago press.

That Kentucky press gang at Chicago is a much mixed up crowd. There are boy editors, gal editors and editors adult and adulterated. Then there are several religious editors, several prohibition editors and several not so religious and not so prohibitions. Under ordinary circumstances there would be little harmony in these incongruous elements, but at the annual meetings of the press associations the watchword is brotherly love and the tomahawk is buried out of sight. All is serene and lamblike at Chicago—the scrapping will be resumed when the crowd gets home.—Paducah News.

There were about one hundred bona fide, editors besides wives and daughters attended the Kentucky Press Outing at Chicago last week and in our opinion Logan Curd, the enterprising editor of the Murray Ledger, was the biggest eater. We always thought we were a good eater, but compared to our friend Curd we were not "in it." He not only takes the cake as a hungry man, but is entitled to the blue ribbon as the most wonderful eater in the world.

The Louisville Times of June 2 says: "There must have been a halcyon and vociferous time at the dedication of the Kentucky Building yesterday. We are told that when the orators had fired and fallen back and the band opened up with Dixie, 'there was no holding the crowd—it madly tore up the bluegrass sod in front of the building.' Drunk with eloquence and music, the visiting barbarians or the unsophisticated exulting Kentucky editors must have mistaken the bluegrass for mint.

It is not flattering to their vanity, but it is a fact that should be gratifying to so much business sense as the Kentucky editors may be blessed with, that their papers are, as a rule, better this week than usual, the improvement being due to the absence of said editors from their respective desks. When the newspaper proprietor is away the office devil gets his say and says it.—Louisville Times.

Several persons have asked us what it will cost to make to a weeks visit to the World's fair at Chicago, and in reply we will state that $50 will be plenty of money for a poor man to spend in making a week or ten day's visit to the greatest show the world has ever known. Any who can go misses the opportunity of his life by not going. Every person who can should go and see for himself.

Marshall county is soon to take a vote on the proposition in regard to the building of a new courthouse. We suggest that before building a temple of justice that those people, or at least some of them, come to Madisonville and see the splendid edifice we are erecting.—Madisonville Hustler.

The editor of the Hustler ought to come down and take a look at our beautiful temple of justice, which was completed over four years ago. Brother; you have the wrong sow by the ear. I guess you intended to say "Calloway," instead of "Marshall."

Death of Lewis Y. Wahl.

While we write these lines the family of J. F. S. Wahl at Coy, in this county, are bowed down in grief over the sudden and accidental death of their beloved son, Lewis Y. Wahl. This young man, aged 18 years, was out hunting last Thursday evening on horseback, with a few of his neighbors, when he attempted to get off his horse to shoot a squirrel, and in getting down his gun caught in some part about the saddle and was accidentally discharged, the contents taking effect in his neck and breast. His companions found him in the throes of death but carried him a short distance away where Dr. T. C. Coleman was called. The doctor found him in such a critical condition that he pronounced the wound fatal, but he lingered until about 6 o'clock when death came and relieved him of his terrible suffering. His death was a shock to the entire community, for his friends were legion. He was buried Friday at Bethlehem cemetery in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends. He was one of the best young men in the county. He was a member of the church possessing all the noble qualities of mind and heart necessary to make him an exemplary young man. He had so lived and conducted himself that he died without a blot or blemish on his character. His mother died when he was quite young and he has been cared for by his father and a step-mother, but we take pleasure in saying that he was dearly beloved by his step-mother, and he never knew a difference in the treatment he received, one or the other. She loved him for his kind, obedient conduct as a child almost as dearly as if he had been her own child. In this their hour of trouble, his parents and brothers and sisters have the universal sympathy of everybody in the loss of their noble boy.

OBITUARIES.

Death the destroyer of mankind has invaded our community and a loved one has fallen beneath his stroke.

Lewis Y. Wahl son of J. F. S. Wahl and Rosa J. Wahl, deceased was born March 22, 1875, and died June 1, 1893, aged 18 years 2 months and 9 days. He was buried Friday at Bethlehem cemetery, funeral services were conducted by Bros. Green and Kirkpatrick. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends and relatives.

Lewis professed a hope in Christ and united with the United Baptist church at Bethlehem and was baptized November 5, 1892. He lived a devoted and exemplary member of same until his death. Weep not dear family, relatives and friends, as for those who have no hope. He has passed through the valley and shadow of death and has joined the angels number to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb around the eternal throne of God throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity. He can not come to us, but may we all prepare to meet him and make one unbroken family around the throne of God. His voice will not only be missed in the loving home circles, but throughout the entire community. May the God of all grace sustain the family, relatives and friends in this dark hour of bereavement. Our loss is his eternal gain. He rests from all his toils and cares in that Golden city with jasper walls. For he often said with flowing tears, "I'm ready when my master calls."

This separation will not be long. For we, like all the earth, must die; We'll meet and sing a heavenly song, "In that sweet by and by." Written by a loving cousin, ALBERT BAILEY.

Coy, Ky., June 4th 1893.

IGLEHART.

In memory of Mrs. Lena O. Iglehart, who was born in this county and near this place on April 13, 1870, joined the Christian church in October 1889, and lived a consistent member of said church until her death which occurred May 28, 1893. Mrs. Iglehart was a daughter of the late V. P. Brien, who died several years ago, and a grand daughter of old Uncle Jimmie Brien, and was universally loved and respected for her many noble virtues by all who knew her. She leaves a devoted husband, two little children, a widowed mother and several brothers and sisters and many relatives and friends to mourn her death. She was confined to her room for several months with that dread disease, consumption. She bore her illness with patience, saying to the last that she was prepared to meet her God. Her whole life has been a splendid example to other people, the final summons finding her house in order. The attendance was large at the funeral which took place at the Brian-Wilson cemetery, Rev. J. M. Pace officiating. The words of the minister were appropriate and very impressive. He spoke words of comfort to the many friends left behind. The family will have the sympathy of all friends in their bereavement. May God bless them and gather them at last to their heavenly home.

Lena, thou wast mild and lovely, Gentle as the summer rose, Ever loved by all who knew thee, Sleeping now in last repose.

She withered like the bright wild flower 'Neath the burning moonlight's ray, To bloom again in Heaven above In that eternal day.

When we, too, have crossed the ocean And its billowy waves passed o'er, Then in Heaven we hope to meet thee Where parting is no more. CARRIE.

Palma, Ky., June 5, 1893.

From Louisville to Chicago.

Promptly at 8:30 Tuesday morning a special train of seven full coaches pulled out from the Union Station on 10th and Broadway, with 151 editors and their wives and daughters, over the J. M. & I railroad for the city of Chicago. It is exactly 304 miles from one place to the other and this magnificent railroad was desirous to see how quick time could be made over the line on an "Exposition Flyer." No stops were made except at Seymour, Columbus, Edinburg, Franklins, Indianapolis, Komomo and Logansport, Ind. A hot-box interfered with the progress of the train and another ear had to be put on at Indianapolis, which cost 15 minutes, but the time was made up in flying across the great prairie land bordering on Lake Michigan. The Pennsylv-vania Line did itself proud for one time. At Indianapolis it attached one of its Pullman Palace dining cars in which 32 could eat at one time, and for three hours the Kentucky editors were fed of all the good things a rich railroad corporation could buy. It was free, it was bountiful, it was elegant, and Mr. Haggarty, one of the young polite passenger agents, did all he could to make the excursionists comfortable and happy. It was the universal verdict of the invited guests of the association that never before had any railroad done more to accommodate the association than the Pennsylvania Line, which brought them safely over a road of 304 miles in seven hours. The train came in on time stopping at 3:55, which was the quickest time ever made over that line. People were out at all the stations along the route to see the "Flyer" pass. Upon our arrival most of us stopped at the Palmer house, and last night held a meeting in the elegant club rooms of that hotel. To day at 10 o'clock we go in body to the Exposition grounds.

Why Not Raise Strawberries. The following we clip from the Tennessee department of the Farmers Home Journal:

"From this season's yield of strawberries Humboldt has realized $100,000. Isn't this enough to make Gibson county berry growers happy and encourage them to stick to the lucious little strawberry if they want to put money in their purse?"

Why can't the Marshall county people raise a few strawberries? So far this season we have only seen a few berries on the market here, and most of them came from the south. We can raise strawberries here as well as the south, and why not do it. It beats raising tobacco at 5 cents a pound, besides it only takes a few weeks, while tobacco is generally on hand from eight to twelve months and sometimes longer. When, oh! when will our farmers open their eyes?

Strongly Endorsed. The advertising of Hood's Sarsaparilla appeals to the sober, common sense of thinking people, because it is true; and it is always fully substantiated by endorsements which in the financial world would be accepted without a moment's hesitation. They tell the story—Hood's cures.

Hood's Pills cure liverills, jaundice, biliousness, sick headache, constipation.

Order of Election.

State of Kentucky, Marshall Co Court } June Term 1893

Upon application by written petition signed by more than twenty-five per cent of the legal voters of each precinct of Marshall county as compared with the number cast at the last preceding general election being filed and a sum of money sufficient to pay all legal fees and costs of holding and advertising the election—herein after ordered having been received by the judge of the Marshall county court and the judge of this court that an election be held in this county on Saturday the 5th day of August, 1893, it being the day named in said petition, by the sheriff of this county who is hereby directed to open or caused to be opened a poll at each and all of the voting places in said county on said date for the purpose of taking the sense of the legal voters of said county upon the proposition "whether or not spirituous, vinous or malt liquors shall be sold, bartered or loaned therein." And the prohibition and provisions of the law under which this order is made and election held are to apply to druggists also.

A Big Job for Congress.
Of all tongues and people under the sun, civilized and uncivilized, ours are the only people that swap gold for silver, and we are doing it at the rate of $4,500,000 a month.
No wonder that gold is leaving our shores at the rate $12,000,000 a month, and under the operation of our present silver policy it is only a question of time when we shall have no gold, except that hid away, and we will become a

The Edict Has Gone Forth.
Last Monday was county court day, and only a reasonable small crowd was in town. There was no business before the county court of much importance, except an order was made by the county judge for an election to be held in this county on the first Saturday in August, 1893, to take the sense of the people on the question whether or not vicious, spirituous or malt liquors shall be sold in this county. The law so far has been complied with and the question is now before the people of the county. The requisite number of petitions was presented to the county judge and the proper amount of money deposited to pay the expenses of the election, and now the burning question is with the voters of the county. They have nothing to do only to decide for themselves, and vote accordingly. This election, we presume will warm up until things will get quite lively before the day comes for the vote to be cast. The agitation should be a friendly one and conducted upon high toned principles. Let every man weigh the question as it should be, and vote for what he considers best for the good of the county.

A Freak of Lightning.

Last week during a thunder storm the lightning struck south end of Robert Clark's house, tearing out several logs and then ran along one of the bed railings breaking it and setting the bed clothes on fire, then went to the north end of the house damaging it very much. Mr. Clark was off from the house a short distance but his wife and children were in the house in a few feet of bed, and strange to say not one was hurt.
It was certainly a close call and very much frightened all of the family.

they have also been cured. It will do you good.

THE NUDE IN ART.

We have struck the nude in Art
In Chicago;
And it gives the folks a start
In Chicago;
But you bet your life we'll show
Everybody that we know
What's the style in Baldhead row,
In Chicago.

There is less of Art than Pork,
In Chicago;
We do not ape New York,
In Chicago;
But we get there just the same,
For in art we're known to fame,
And the classic is our game,
In Chicago.

It is said that we are crude
In Chicago;
That we're not up to the nude,
In Chicago;
Well, they've simply slipped a cog,
They are off their dialogue,
They should see a well-scrapped hog,
In Chicago.

And the hog we think can shine
In Chicago;
With the human form divine,
In Chicago;
Yet we're willing quite to hear
What to do, so's not to queer
The Apollo Belvedere
In Chicago.

And if Venus wants to come
To Chicago,
And to feel herself at home
In Chicago;
We have only this to say;
She can come right here and stay,
And we'll learn to dress her way,
In Chicago.

We are worshipers of art
In Chicago;
We will always do our part
In Chicago;
And, as we want the best,
Why, the nude goes with the rest,
As our hogs go, when they're dressed,
In Chicago.

2,228,672.

ber of bottles of Dr. Kings New Discovery for consumption, cough antee that money would be re-its success is plain. It never dis-pendent on as the very best remedy

An Editor's Prayer.

The following over the nom de plume of "Unknown Author," appeared in a recent number of the Ocala Capitol. Forward, turn forward, oh time in your flight; turn me a fortune and set me up right.
I am weary of running in debt for my clothes and owing for grub that down my throat goes; weary of working for what I have not, weary of working for what I have got. Never, no never, turn backward for me, for well I remember my good mother's knee; I remember the slipper came down with a slam whenever I got in the blackberry jam. The days, too, at school were a terrible bore, when I was obliged to stand on the floor, all in the world that I ever done was to wink at a girl—pure matter of fun. The days of the past, like days that we meet, composed a fair mixture of bitter and sweet.
So forward, turn forward oh! time, in your way, and give me some cash just enough for to-day.

scared out of their wits during the Strange Conduct.

Last Monday Ike Washam, esq., a good citizen living near Harvey in this county, came to town and as usual brought his old war time saddle bags with him and left them at a certain place. He came back and got his bags in a short time and went away. Soon after he was gone the lady of the house missed a favorite pet chicken. She had raised and she put Jim Jones on the hunt of it. He came up in town and was standing near the genial squire and to his great astonishment heard the chicken calling for some one in the bags.
He called the attention of the ex-justice to the fact that a chicken was in his saddle bags and asked him where he got it. There it was that the good natured squire understood the cruel joke of the "chick" in the saddle bags. He left town in a few minutes swearing he would never stop until he voted whiskey out of the county.

A Few Interesting Notes About the World's Fair.

W. D. Boyce's Correspondence Bureau, Administration Bld'g World's Fair Grounds, May 31.

In time of peace prepare for war.

The fourth of week of the great exposition has been one of ups and downs, especially in regard to the weather; yesterday a straw hat today a sealskin. We would advise all who contemplate coming, even for a few days, to bring with them warm underclothing and wraps, as the thermometer at times rises or falls forty degrees without previous warning.

We are on the threshold of the second month, and while considerable has been accomplished since the opening, still so much remains to be finished, yes, even started, that the public is beginning to think (especially those from a distance) that they are paying "pretty dear for their whistle." Not a week passes but there is discord where harmony should prevail, procrastination in place of speedy results, and about the only thing that we can say is finished, is nature, for with the coming of the sunshine and rain, the trees must put on their coats of green, the flowers bloom, and shrubs bud. There is no use going around the bush to say that the White City, to this date, is at least sixty days behind the schedule time, and only quick, continuous hard work will redeem the failure already recorded. Whatever energy the management displayed before May 1 toward making ready—and by that, we mean absolutely finished—seems to have left them, after the opening day, and since then matters have been drifting along with the tide. Arouse yourself, Mr. Commissioners, and redeem the promises made, and show to the world that much can be accomplished immediately.

We note that high commissioner in chief of the department of publicity and promotion, Major P. Handy, addressed the press congress last week in memorial art palace. Perhaps it was unknown to many, that he said Moses stands a chance of not lending his marshalled hosts through the wilderness, to the promised land. In fact he will do well if he gets a glimpse of it. His autocratic, overbearing manner, unkind treatment of the press (outside his own diets have caused those in power to consider the advisability of deposing Moses, and substituting an Aaron in his place. Any change in this direction would be beneficial and welcome to many.

The work of installation in the several departments goes on, but oh, how slow. Many of the exhibits are not within the grounds others not even manufactured, and while one can now get value received for his 50 cents, still many coming from a distance can't afford to wait until July (I was about to say), but perhaps August would be nearer the truth, to see that which should be practically ready now.

Strolling through the transportation building, one is struck by the thorough and substantial way things are done across the lakes and beyond the posts in Canada, as exemplified by the exhibit of a train of vestibuled cars built from mahogany, and finished inside with all the necessary adjuncts of a modern railway coach, and which train is a counterpart of those in daily service on the Canadian Pacific railway, which runs through such a rich country, and which the display in the agricultural and horticultural departments, gives so much evidence of.

Our mothers, wives and daughters have made a beautiful showing of their handiwork in the building erected especially for their use. All the arts, both useful and ornamental are here exhibited, worked out by their skillful fingers and busy brain.

Speaking of women, brings to mind the visit that royalty will have paid us, against the time this letter is read, in the person of Princess Eulalie, of Spain. How many of us would gladly exchange places with her for only a short time, as all her expenses are borne by our government or the cities she visits. There will be no end of receptions in her honor during her stay among us.

During the remaining week of the fair, the rate of admission for children between 6 and 12 years has been reduced to 25 cents.

anniversary of her birth, the 24th of May, her subjects and many who were not) assembled in Victoria house, and amid flowers and speech, and to the strain of "God Save the Queen," paid honor to her name, and not content with daylight festivities, adjourned to meet in the Virginia hotel in the evening, and there clinked each others goblet's and drank to her good health and long life.

Sturdy rockbound Maine invited many people to partake of her hospitality, and hear the music, and essays provided for their entertainment, and meet with Gov. Cleaves and staff and assist in opening their state building.

Germany also made those invited very welcome, at her dedication, through the imperial commissioner Herr Wermuth. His Highness Duke de Veragua, being one of the guests, was forced to hold a little reception on his own account. Germany's building cost $150,000; and as the material used in its construction all came from across the pond, it will serve as an exhibit from King William's country. The exhibit of the Vaterland in agricultural building was also opened last week, and makes a fine showing.

"Paris brought to our doors." Hard to believe, yet spend a few moments or hours in the French building and see if it is not true. There so much to interest that will spend days in the gay capital.

With the accompaniment of 1,200 voices united in choral strains, Prof. Tomlin kept time with the music made by the splashing of the waters, gushing from the electrical fountains last Saturday evening. It is a treat to see these many-colored waters, bubbling and dancing, but combine with that the effect at eventide, of harmoniously sung anthems, and one has to see and hear to fully appreciate its beauty.

The press congress held their sessions in the art palace last week, and many men and women distinguished in letters, read papers or addressed the interested assemblages.

Just as sure as hot weather comes there will be more or less bowel complaint in this vicinity. Every person, and especially families ought to have some reliable medicine at hand for instant use in case it is needed. It is the best, the most reliable and most successful treatment known and is pleasant to take. For sale by R. H. Starks.

A recent reference to the absence of members from Frankfort, made by The Ledger, was displeasing to some of the absentees. That's not surprising. It would be impossible to tell the truth about the present Kentucky Legislature without hurting the feelings of somebody.—Maysville Public Ledger.
